PREFACE

As the National Agricultural Library completed its first century of service, it became evident that new approaches and new techniques were required to improve its service to the Department and to the Nation. The growing bulk of publications and the problems of making them known and available for use called for methods designed for current and anticipated needs.

Library users found it increasingly difficult to find what they needed in the card catalog. Suggestions were made to refile the catalog so that under each heading the titles would be arranged chronologically with the most recent publications first. A similar recommendation was made for shelving publications chronologically. Although these ideas were suggestive, they did not offer solutions to the problems.

It was evident that in order to provide the type of service which should be available during the Library's second century, all aspects of Library policies and procedures should be re-examined and changes should be made promptly. A basic step was the decision to publish the complete card catalog as of December 31, 1965. This opened many new possible courses for the future beginning in January, 1966.

Fortunately the decision to publish was made at a time when American librarians were interested in publishing book catalogs, and when techniques and methods were developing which made such publication practical. Bella E. Shachtman of the Library staff studied the methods available for publication and drew up guidelines to make the catalog useful and legible, yet available within a price range libraries could afford. When it became evident that the Library would not be able to finance the publication, Miss Shachtman took the initiative in interesting commercial organizations in its publication.

We are most fortunate in having a publisher who has had broad experience in this work and who has given us complete cooperation.

Miss Shachtman gave leadership, guidance, and imaginative direction to this project. It could not have been carried out, however, without the wholehearted, enthusiastic cooperation of the staff at the National Agricultural Library. To all members of our staff, therefore, we have a deep indebtedness for this major library reference tool.

INTRODUCTION

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there is hereby established at the seat of Government of the United States a Department of Agriculture, the general designs and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word. . . ."

"And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Agriculture to acquire and preserve in his Department all information concerning agriculture which he can obtain by means of books and correspondence. . . ."¹

From this charge included in the Organic Act which established the Department of Agriculture on May 15, 1862, the National Agricultural Library, known as the Department of Agriculture Library for the next 100 years, was conceived. When Isaac Newton was Commissioner of Agriculture in 1864, the first appropriation, a total of $4,000, was made for the Library and the Laboratory. It was not until 1867 that the first librarian, Aaron Burt Grosh, was appointed.

Collection

The nucleus for the Library collection came from the Agricultural Division of the Patent Office in the Department of Interior. It was that division which was transferred to the Commissioner of Agriculture to become the foundation for the new Department. In 1839, $1,000 was authorized to the Agricultural Division of the Patent Office to collect and distribute seed, to carry out agricultural investigations, and to procure agricultural statistics. In her Report for 1912, Claribel R. Barnett, then the Librarian of the Department of Agriculture Library, wrote: "It is quite probable that at least some small part of this appropriation was spent for books necessary in compiling the agricultural statistics."²

With a core of 1,000 publications on agricultural statistics inherited from the Patent Office Agricultural Division in 1862, it became immediately necessary for the newly created Department of Agriculture to collect and organize chemical publications for its Division of Chemistry. Botany became the next major subject collected, followed by forestry, zoology, agricultural bacteriology, rural economics, and general works on agriculture. Strong collections were developed in government agricultural publications, stock, herd, and stud books, and in bee culture publications. Serials and periodicals were recognized from the earliest days as basic to research, and these were acquired as funds permitted and as exchange contacts were developed.

In addition to its interest in plant exploration and the exchange of seeds with foreign countries, from its earliest days the Department was equally interested in the exchange of publications. The Commissioner of Agriculture reported each year in his annual report on the number of volumes that had been added to the collection during the year. In his report for the year 1875, Commissioner Watts wrote: "The Library of the Department has been more largely increased during the past year than in any that preceded it, by the purchase of a few valuable works, but more particularly by the contributions of foreign countries and societies."³ This interest in publications exchange has continued throughout the years; the Library currently exchanges with 9,835 organizations in 155 countries and their instrumentalities, exclusive of Canada, for which a count is not available at this time. Approximately 75 per cent of the publications added to the collection currently are received as a result of gift and exchange arrangements.

Introduction

Secretary of Agriculture J. Sterling Morton, in 1893, suggested that the Librarian of Congress transfer to the Library "one copy of each of the works bearing upon agriculture, horticulture, forestry, pomology, botany, and kindred topics now in his possession or that may come into his hands hereafter under Copyright Law."⁴ It was not until 1943, when Dr. Ralph R. Shaw was Librarian of the Department, that an agreement was reached with the Library of Congress to supply to the Department Library one copy of each agricultural book deposited for copyright which was classified by the Library of Congress in its "S" (Agriculture) classification. Unfortunately, this agreement has never been extended beyond the limits of this classification.

In 1880 the Commissioner of Agriculture reported that the Library contained between 7,000 and 8,000 volumes. In that report he emphasized that it should contain many more volumes and especially "every book that has ever been published on agriculture."⁵ By 1908, the Library had grown to about 100,000 volumes, and in December, 1965, it was estimated that the collection had grown to approximately 1,250,000 volumes.

Owing to the foresight of the Librarians of the Department, the collecting policy for the Library throughout its history has been interpreted to cover agriculture in its broadest aspects, including all the sciences basic to agriculture. As a result, the Library has one of the best agricultural/biological collections in the world. Collecting scope has been broad, and coverage has been worldwide. The Library not only serves the Department's needs, but has served as a national library since its birth. Its fields of major interest, as stated in the Library's Acquisition Policy, are:

Agriculture (General)

Economic, historical, technical, commercial, sociological, legal, financial, educational, biographical, and other aspects

Agricultural societies, organizations, cooperatives, etc.

Animal science

Animal husbandry (not to include material primarily sporting), entomology, veterinary science, economic zoology, and zoology of domestic animals

Plant science

Economic and general botany, plant culture, field crops, horticultural crops (including fruits, vegetables, ornamentals), plant pathology, weeds, etc.

Agricultural chemistry

Agricultural engineering

Farm structures, farm machinery, rural electrification, irrigation, drainage, water supply, flood control

Soils, fertilizers, and soil conservation

Forestry and utilization and technology of raw forest products

Agricultural products, including industrial uses

Home economics (except cookbooks)

Rural sociology and rural life

Agricultural economics

Marketing, finance, labor, land, farm management, farm and crop insurance, etc.

Statistics

Production, trade, consumption of agricultural and forest products, prices, etc.⁶

One change was made in this policy when, early in 1964, national responsibility for collecting, bibliographical control, and servicing of agricultural machinery catalogs was accepted by the University of California, Davis. No single library has the funds or personnel to collect all materials of interest to it. With cooperation from the Land-Grant College and University libraries, as well as from both government and non-government libraries, the National Agricultural Library continues in its never-ending endeavors to assure knowledge and availability in the United States of all substantive agricultural/biological literature.

Introduction

Classification

The earliest classification scheme, and incidentally the first book catalog of the Library that could be located, is the Class List of Works in the Library of the United States Department of Agriculture prepared in 1887.⁷ This manuscript, bound in eight volumes, includes a "Sketch of the Classification," followed by the titles held by the Library arranged under each class. The first page states that the complete classification contained an alphabetic index which referred to each subject independently, and that it could be found in "the printed book." Unfortunately the "printed book" referred to could not be located.

During the summer of 1889, W. I. Fletcher, then librarian of Amherst College, was hired for about six weeks to reclassify the library collection. It was felt that there was no adequate printed classification for agricultural literature available and it was imperative that one be developed. Mr. Fletcher prepared a classification for the Library's collection, and, with the help of several assistants, he began the Library's shelflist. This scheme, revised and expanded as necessary, was used to classify the Library's collection through December, 1965.

The Library's classification scheme was originally broad and simple, with 230 classes set up to accommodate about 25,000 volumes. By the time the fifth and last edition was published in 1940, the scheme had approximately 2,200 classes. The first edition of the Scheme of Classification was published in 1898. A list of the published editions is shown at the end of this Introduction.⁸

Although the Library used the Scheme of Classification through 1965, during most of those years it was felt to be unsatisfactory. In the Librarian's report for 1909, Claribel R. Barnett wrote: "We have not . . . been able to conform to the Library of Congress system of classification, since a large part of this Library was cataloged previous to the adoption by the Library of Congress of its present classification, and we have not had sufficient assistance to attempt a reclassification. This is regretted, as our Library has in many classes outgrown its broad classification and it would without doubt be benefited by the adoption of the classification of the Library of Congress."⁹

This same regret was expressed repeatedly in the Preface to the editions of the Scheme of Classification which followed. From at least 1916 through 1965, the use by other libraries of the Scheme of Classification for the United States Department of Agriculture Library was discouraged, since the scheme was in many respects illogical and unbalanced.

With each new edition of the Scheme of Classification, attempts were made to reclassify those parts of the collection for which the scheme had been expanded. This was not entirely successful owing to the lack of staff to carry out the work. Until 1954, classification of U. S. Department of Agriculture publications had been based on the organizational structure of the Department. With every major change in Department organization, this part of the library classification scheme had to be revised. Classification by organization was abandoned in 1954, and titles were classified under the subject of the title. To distinguish United States Department of Agriculture publications, and to keep these publications together as an archival collection, a capital A was used immediately preceding the subject classification number. This at long last did away with the necessity to revise the classification scheme every time the Department was reorganized.

Publication of this Dictionary Catalog of the National Agricultural Library is one of the factors which influenced the decision to adopt the Library of Congress classification schedules for the National Agricultural Library collection beginning with titles added to the collection in January, 1966. With the printed catalog available, there was no need to reclassify the older collection, nor was there a need to continue to use a classification scheme which was illogical, one which was greatly in need of expansion, and one which was used by very few libraries outside the Department of Agriculture.

During 1965, in addition to a review of the Department's Scheme of Classification, studies were made of Frauendorfer's Classification Scheme of Agricultural Sciences, Dewey Decimal Classification, Library of Congress Classification, and the Universal Decimal Classification. Each scheme has disadvantages. Intensive studies made of the Library of Congress classification schedules H (Social Sciences and Economics), Q (Science), S (Agriculture), and T (Technology) revealed that the schedules would be adequate for agricultural classification until such time as the Library's staff could assist the Library of Congress to revise the schedules.

Introduction

The decision to adopt the Library of Congress classification scheme was based on a policy decision to adopt the scheme which would be most useful to the Land-Grant College and University libraries and the libraries of the State Agricultural Experiment Stations. During the summer of 1965, an informal survey was made of these libraries to learn what classification schemes they were using, whether they were planning to change to a different classification scheme, and if so, to what scheme. The responses indicated a definite trend on the part of these libraries to the Library of Congress scheme. The National Agricultural Library Catalog,¹⁰ which supplements this Dictionary Catalog, reflects the Library's current use of the Library of Congress classification schedules.

Cataloging

From its very earliest days, the Library was anxious to make its collection available for use by others, and a variety of means was employed to do so. In his report for the year 1871, Commissioner of Agriculture Frederick Watts wrote: "A catalogue of the library is being prepared, in which will be classified the most important subjects, so that persons wishing to investigate any particular topic can see at a glance the titles of all works relating to it."¹¹ In 1873 he reported: "The librarian is now engaged in the preparation of a catalogue of the library. This is a task which requires much time, labor and knowledge. The full title of each book will be copied under the author's name; then a classification of subjects, and a cross-reference, comprising a short abstract, (generally in one line), of the titles of all the books in the library referring to any particular subject."¹² It is evident that these attempts were unsuccessful, for in 1880 "An appropriation sufficient to have the library properly catalogued, and thus more available for ready reference"¹³ was requested.

Many hours went into the preparation of a catalog in the early 1880's, but in 1887, B. Pickman Mann reported in a letter to the Library Journal: "At the A.L.A. meeting, last July . . . I said . . . that the card catalog of the library is of very little use, and there is no other, old or new. Beginning with this new year, I have been released from other work, and am charged with the duty of making a catalog which shall be adequate to the scope of the library. This library, by its very nature, should rank only second to that of the Library of Congress in its wealth of material upon the biological sciences, and upon agriculture, horticulture, and animal industry. Indeed, if properly housed, it should contain the works belonging to the national library itself upon the subjects which fall within the scope of the Department of Agriculture."¹⁴ Evidently, the handwritten Class List of Works, prepared in 1887, did not meet the needs.

It was not until 1893, when Wm. Parker Cutter was appointed as Librarian of the Department, that the dictionary catalog which is published in these volumes was started. It was during his term as Librarian, that printed catalog cards, comprehensive subject bibliographies, and quarterly lists of accessions to the Library began to be published by the Library. It was also during his term as Librarian that close working relations were established with the Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations and directly with the various colleges and stations. In an article about the Library, which was published in the Department's Yearbook for 1897, Mr. Cutter wrote:

As a contribution to the knowledge of the literature of agriculture, accurate lists of the various sources of information on specific agricultural subjects have been published, and others are in course of preparation. These lists are finding ready acceptance among workers in agricultural investigation, and have called forth much favorable comment. There is now in course of preparation a list of the best publications covering the whole field of agriculture, and it is the intention in the near future to prepare suitable printed indexes to the main authorities on agricultural subjects, to serve as a partial guide to students and teachers of agriculture.

Introduction

The general catalogue of the Library will be completed in the card form in the course of the next few years, and will doubtless be printed [italics added]; it will be the most complete catalogue of agricultural literature ever issued, and will be of great value to workers in agricultural investigations.¹⁵

For the next few years, publication of the Library's catalog was frequently mentioned in the Annual Reports of the Secretary of Agriculture and those of the Librarian. However, it is only with the publication of this Dictionary Catalog that Mr. Cutter's dream of 1897 becomes a reality.

Little has been published about the policies for and methods of cataloging since the dictionary catalog was started. Prior to Mr. Cutter's time, Commissioner Watts reported: "Of the numerous pamphlets presented to the Library, those of permanent interest are classified and bound, as those on dairying, the fisheries, fertilizers, mining, etc. Those of a more miscellaneous nature are bound by States, indexed, cataloged and lettered with the name of the State to which they refer."¹⁶ From then until 1909, no definite information is available, but it is known that the Department Library cooperated closely with the Library of Congress and evidently followed its cataloging pattern for the most part. In 1909, the Library adopted the Library of Congress catalog rules, but not its subject headings, even though it was recognized that it would be desirable for the subject headings used by the Library to conform as closely as possible to those of the Library of Congress. In general, the Department Library's policy for subject headings has been to use specific subjects for publications in the research fields of the Department and to use general subjects for minor publications outside the research fields of the Department. Because it is a special library, in a great many cases scientific terms are used rather than common names. For science and technology, it has generally been the practice to use geographic subdivisions following the subjects, rather than the geographic name followed by the subject subdivision, which is the order generally followed for headings in the social sciences.

In 1932, a cataloger from the main Library was assigned to work for a month in the Bureau of Agricultural Economics Library in order to take advantage of subject specialists' knowledge in cataloging economic publications for the main Library. Although this assignment was reported to have speeded up the cataloging of these publications, no further assignments of this nature were made. Instead, the Library has tried to find catalogers with specialized subject backgrounds. Unfortunately, these are few and far between.

The Library began to use the Library of Congress form for government offices in 1936, at the special request of the Library of Congress. In her report for 1937, the Librarian noted this as a contributory cause for building up a cataloging arrearage and reported: "It has proved a considerable sacrifice of our own good to the larger good of cooperation."¹⁷

Analytics for monographs in Department series had been made at least since 1899, and in 1904 the Library began to make analytics for selected foreign series. The latter were discontinued in 1939. In 1943, all work on contents notes for serials and on analytics, except for important monographs in Department series, was stopped. It was felt that adequate coverage was given to monographs in series in the Bibliography of Agriculture. This decision was rescinded in 1952, when a policy decision was made to prepare analytics for all monographs in series in the Department's research fields, except for foreign and domestic experiment station and extension service publications, minor articles similar to a periodical article, pre-prints, and foreign language monographs if the Library has the English edition. Monographs in Department series for which catalog card copy is supplied to the Library of Congress for printing are treated fully with added entries and subjects; all others are given a main entry card only.

In 1924, a simplification in the procedure for cataloging serials was reported but not identified. This was followed in 1943 by a decision to stop making series cards for unnumbered series and for all publishers series whether numbered or not. The latter were removed from the catalog. No record can be found of the date of the decision to catalog all serials, including periodicals, from the earliest issue in hand; but that has been the practice for at least the last thirty years. Perhaps that is the "simplification" reported in 1924. Under this procedure, added entries were made for all issuing office and title changes either before or after the publication date of the piece originally cataloged, so that the publication could be located regardless of which title or issuing office was requested. This relieved the catalogers of a tremendous amount of recataloging, the only problem being that there was no approach to the changed issuing office or title under subject. In 1952, a study was made of the use of serial closing information in the public catalog which resulted in a decision to stop showing this information in the catalog. The need to withdraw and refile a tremendous number of public catalog cards for this purpose was removed. Another similar timesaver was the decision in 1953 to show beginning collation for serials in the public catalog only when the first published issue was received. Since 1951, the Library's permanent serial record has been available by telephone to give information service on serial history and holdings.

With Dr. Ralph R. Shaw as Librarian, the 1940's saw a reorganization of the entire Department library system and heavy concentration on work simplification. As was to be expected, this had a direct effect on cataloging. In 1942, all libraries of the Department were consolidated into the Department Library. The Bureau library collections, which were organized as each Bureau was established, were integrated into the main Library collection, and the card catalogs of the libraries of the Soil Conservation Service, Bureau of Chemistry and Agricultural Engineering, Bureau of Dairy Industry, Forest Service, Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, and the Bureau of Agricultural Economics were consolidated into the main Library's public catalog. Later, the catalogs of the Commodity Exchange Administration, Office of Experiment Stations, Farm Credit Administration, Bureau of Home Economics, and Rural Electrification libraries were added. Subject headings relating to the special work of each bureau were preserved and incorporated into the Department Library catalog as far as they were consistent with systems already established in that catalog.

In October, 1943, rules for brief cataloging of separates were adopted, and in February, 1944, rules for brief cataloging of serials were put into use. Since that time, many items formerly considered necessary for full cataloging, such as repetition of the author's name in the title statement, illustrative materials unless these were the main body of the work, size, and bibliographical and other notes have been omitted. Making titles new to the collection available for use as quickly as possible has been and continues to be the prime consideration. When the Library of Congress published its Rules for Descriptive Cataloging in 1947, the catalogers began to use the new rules for titles for which the Library supplied catalog card copy to the Library of Congress for printing. For other titles, changes were made in style and form to agree with the Library of Congress rules, but no other changes were made which would make cataloging more complicated for the Library. The catalogers' copies of the Rules for Descriptive Cataloging in the Library of Congress were annotated by means of marginal notes to show where the Library's cataloging practices differed from those of the Library of Congress. In 1950, it was decided to stop completing authors' names in the public catalog and instead to prepare a cross-reference from the full form of the name to the form used in the public catalog.

Until 1951, theses had been cataloged spasmodically. By that time a large uncataloged collection had been accumulated, even though they were acquired on a highly selective basis at the Masters and Doctoral levels only. It was decided to classify these in the regular collection but to assign only one subject except in rare cases. Each thesis was cataloged separately until 1955, when the policy decision was made to catalog as series those theses issued in a series by schools in the research fields of the Department, and to make only author analytics for the individual pieces. The Bibliography of Agriculture was depended on to bring out the subject aspects. This policy was broadened in 1964 to treat as serials unnumbered dissertations received in large numbers from a single institution of research interest to the Department. Author analytics continue to be made for the individual papers.

Because of the various ways in which individual pamphlets had been cataloged, it was realized in the 1950's that the pamphlet collection, which had grown extensively through the years, was of little use. The pamphlet collection is being weeded as time permits. Some items important to the collection have been classified and cataloged in full. Other items have been discarded or are still in the pamphlet collection awaiting retention and cataloging decisions. The Library has no reprint collection. Reprints from publications not in the Library's collection and new pamphlets of interest to the Library's collection are given the same cataloging treatment as new books or serials.

Introduction

Bibliographical Tools

It has always been and it continues to be of major importance to the Department to supply useful information from its Library collection to the entire country. Under Mr. Cutter's direction in 1894, publication of quarterly lists of accessions to the Library and bibliographies on special subjects were started. The Library began to issue printed catalog cards for the publications of the Department of Agriculture in 1899. To the best of anyone's knowledge, this was the first attempt by any library to print and distribute catalog cards to others.

In 1902, the card service was extended under the Librarian, Josephine A. Clarke, when the Department of Agriculture Library became the first Government department library to cooperate with the Library of Congress in its program to issue catalog cards for accessions to its collection. The printed cards for which the Department Library was, and is, responsible are identified as the Agr. series. This cooperation was further extended in 1904, when the Library began to supply to the Library of Congress catalog card copy for printing for analytics of articles from three important foreign agricultural journals. As the years passed, the Department Library supplied cataloging copy for printing for more and more titles in addition to those for Department publications. The Librarian's report for 1909 shows that manuscript copy for printing of cards was supplied for new additions to the Department Library collection, for current Department publications, and for articles in the three foreign agricultural periodicals. By 1918, the total number of titles prepared for the printing of cards by the Library of Congress was 30,918. In 1939, because the number of card subscribers did not warrant the time and effort being spent, it was decided to stop making analytic cards for articles in the foreign agricultural journals. In 1943, the Library of Congress agreed to supply to the Department Library one copy of each agricultural book deposited for copyright in return for receiving cataloging copy for printing from the Department Library. That same year, the Library decided to stop supplying other catalog card copy for printing to the Library of Congress except for USDA printed publications and certain processed publications which the Department Library was to select as of most general interest.

The 1948 Annual Report of the Catalog Section reported that cooperative cataloging copy was furnished to the Library of Congress for printed U. S. Department of Agriculture publications, copyright books classified in "S" which were supplied by the Library of Congress, and certain foreign publications received through the cooperative acquisitions program. In September, 1952, at the suggestion of the Librarian of Congress, it was agreed that the Library would no longer supply to the Library of Congress manuscript catalog card copy to print for "S" classification deposit books. Supplying copy to print for foreign publications had stopped in the meantime.

Thus the Library has gone full circle in its endeavors in this area. Catalog card copy for printing was supplied to the Library of Congress at the beginning only for the publications of the Department of Agriculture. At present, this is the only type of catalog copy supplied for printing. A copy of the catalog card for every title added to the National Agricultural Library's collection, however, is furnished to the Library of Congress for inclusion in the National Union Catalog.

Distribution of printed catalog cards was only one of the ways in which the Library tried to make the contents of its collection known to those to whom the collection would be useful. Beginning in January, 1894, a list of "Accessions to the Department Library" was published in various issues of the U. S. Department of Agriculture's Bulletin.¹⁸ Other issues of the Bulletin were devoted to bibliographies on special subjects. "Accessions to the Department Library" included both monographs and serials. At first, these lists were arranged alphabetically by entry, but the arrangement was changed in later lists to an alphabetical listing under subjects. Although the accession lists did not include the Library call numbers for the listed publications, the printed catalog card number appeared in the later issues with instructions that these cards might be purchased from the Card Section of the Library of Congress. "Accessions to the Department Library," Bulletin No. 74, published in 1910, listed additions to the collection for the period October-December, 1909, and was the last accessions list in this series to be published.

Introduction

Other issues in the Bulletin series were devoted to such bibliographies as "List of publications relating to forestry in the Library of the United States Department of Agriculture" published as Bulletin 24 in October, 1898, and "Periodical and society publications currently received at the Department Library" issued as Bulletin 2, published in June, 1894.

A new series, Monthly Bulletin,¹⁹ which the Library started in January, 1910, included both "Notes" of interest to agricultural librarians and a monthly list of "Accessions" arranged alphabetically under 36 or more subject categories. The "Accessions" lists included not only the Library of Congress card number, but for the first time Department of Agriculture Library call numbers were given. The Monthly Bulletin ceased publication with the "Accessions" for June, 1913, probably because of the pressures of World War I.

During the years 1913-1930, a Newsletter,²⁰ at first in typewritten form and later mimeographed, was issued by the Library, but this did not include additions to the Library collection. Special bibliographies were published, however, in Bibliographical Contributions,²¹ issued by the Library from 1919 to 1939.

Agricultural Library Notes,²² issued monthly by the Library, with the cooperation of the libraries of the Land-Grant Colleges and the State Agricultural Experiment Stations, began publication in January, 1926, as a means of communication between the agricultural libraries of the United States. This mimeographed newsletter included in addition to news notes, lists of "new agricultural periodicals and changed titles" and a "Selected list of mimeographed publications of the U. S. Department of Agriculture." Titles of the latter were arranged under the Bureau and Office responsible for the publication. No Library call numbers were given. It was not until volume 9, number 1, January, 1934, that "Principal Library Accessions," also without the Library call numbers, were listed under subject category. Library call numbers were included in later issues. Agricultural Library Notes ceased publication in June, 1942, and the *Bibliography of Agriculture*²³ began monthly publication in July of that year as the Library's published tool for indexing agricultural literature. Most special bibliographies are now published in the *Library List*²⁴ series, but between 1943 and 1954 many appeared in the Department's *Bibliographical Bulletin*²⁵ series.

The Bibliography of Agriculture replaced a number of recurring special bibliographies issued by the libraries of the various agencies of the Department which were consolidated into the Department Library in 1942. Such bibliographies as Entomology Current Literature and Plant Science Literature became sections of the Bibliography of Agriculture. Beginning with the July, 1943, issue, the separate sections of the Bibliography were combined into a single monthly publication and its scope was broadened. Previous lists had covered Agricultural Economics and Rural Sociology, Agricultural Engineering, Entomology, Plant Science, Forestry, and Food Processing and Distribution. The new bibliography included in addition the indexing of the literature on human nutrition, animal industry, and other agricultural subjects not covered in the previous lists. Eventually, the scope of the bibliography was enlarged to index under broad subjects all current literature of agriculture and the allied sciences received in the Library. Special lists, such as New Periodicals and Serials, Translations, U. S. Department of Agriculture Publications, and lists of other special groups of materials are included. Library call numbers are given and short explanatory notes are supplied if the title is not clear.

The Bibliography of Agriculture is an outstanding index to agricultural literature, but in order to keep it current and within manageable proportions, it is limited to indexing only currently published materials in the agricultural fields of major interest to the Department. Literature received more than one year after publication, literature of interest to the Department but outside its major research fields, and literature in some foreign languages, are generally excluded.

Because the Bibliography of Agriculture is limited in some respects and because the collection in the National Agricultural Library is so rich, and in order to provide cataloging information to those to whom it would be useful, the Library's present Director, Foster E. Mohrhardt, encouraged the Division which prepares the Bibliography of Agriculture to make more complete information on titles added to the collection available in some other way. In May and June, 1963, three issues of "Newly Cataloged Titles, A Selected List" were published on a semi-monthly basis as Library List No. 78, and its supplements, one and two. Catalog cards for selected titles cataloged during the previous two-week period were arranged under thirteen subject categories, photographed, and published. Users were requested to submit reactions, which along with the availability of funds in 1964, would determine whether publication would be continued. Only a few mixed reactions were received, and since funds were not available for this purpose in 1964, publication was discontinued.

Introduction

Since the various bibliographies issued by the National Agricultural Library do not offer a key to the complete collection, and since such a key would be extremely valuable to scientists in all parts of the world, steps were taken beginning in 1964 to provide that key. The first major accomplishment was the publication early in 1966 of the first monthly issue of the National Agricultural Library Catalog. For the first time in the history of the Library, this catalog makes cataloging information for every title added to the collection beginning in January, 1966, available to scientists and librarians. The titles are arranged alphabetically under fifteen subject categories and in a separate section they are arranged alphabetically by entry. In each case complete cataloging information as used in the Library's card catalog is given. The last section of the monthly catalog lists alphabetically translated articles which have been added to the collection. The National Agricultural Library Catalog supplements this Dictionary Catalog. It is hoped that cumulative volumes of the monthly catalog will be published to serve as permanent supplements to the Dictionary Catalog of the National Agricultural Library, 1862-1965.

Acknowledgements

This introduction cannot be closed without expressing a deep sense of gratitude to those Department Commissioners, Department Secretaries, and Librarians who laid the foundation for and built the magnificent collection of publications the National Agricultural Library has today, and for their desire to make it available for use on an international basis. An equal sense of gratitude goes to all the devoted catalogers the Library has had, who prepared the information for the catalog cards that are reproduced in this catalog. Grateful thanks go to the Library's first and continuous cooperator, the Library of Congress, for encouraging Rowman and Littlefield, Inc., to undertake publication of this catalog and the National Agricultural Library Catalog. Finally, to Rowman and Littlefield, Inc., the Library is deeply grateful for helping it "diffuse among the people . . . useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word,"¹ and for making the catalogs available at a reasonable cost to those who will find them useful, no matter where they may be located.

CONTENTS AND ARRANGEMENT

Scope

This Dictionary Catalog contains, in one alphabetic sequence, author, title, and subject entries for monographs, serials, and analytics as cataloged for the main collection of the National Agricultural Library and for its Bee Culture and Beltsville Branches. Descriptive information, including notes, has been reproduced as it appears in the card catalog. Library call numbers are also given. Tracings, however, have been omitted. In the card catalog, many tracings appear on the backs of cards; in some cases, changes in tracings have been made only on the main entry card. To have included incomplete or incorrect information in the published work would have been more misleading than helpful.

Information cards, such as those describing the history of a corporate body or geographic area, have been reproduced from the card catalog. Also included in the printed volumes are author and subject cross-references.

At the end of the Dictionary Catalog, there appears, in a separate alphabetical arrangement, a list of translations of articles in the Library collection. This file consists of main entry only under author or, if the article has no author, under its title. Translations of articles are not classified. They are identified by a consecutively assigned number shown in call number position.

Policies

The changes in policy and practice made throughout the years of its development are reflected in the Dictionary Catalog. The following basic tools were in use when this catalog was discontinued in December, 1965. They had been modified, interpreted, and supplemented in various ways to meet the changing needs of the Library:

A.L.A. Cataloging Rules for Author and Title Entries. Second Edition, 1949.

Rules for Descriptive Cataloging in the Library of Congress, 1949.

Scheme of Classification for the United States Department of Agriculture Library. Edition 5, 1940.

U. S. National Agricultural Library. Subject Heading List. Preliminary Edition, 1963.

A.L.A. Rules for Filing Catalog Cards, 1942.

Editing

The publisher provided an editorial staff to review the card catalog before publication. Working from guidelines provided by the Library, this staff concentrated on withdrawing obsolete cards from the catalog and checking its filing arrangement.

More than 1,500,000 cards were examined. With limited time to perform such a large task, complete accuracy cannot be assured. Only the most glaring instances of error or illegibility warranted correcting or retyping cards. No attempt could be made to recatalog old entries to bring them in line with current practices.

Filing Arrangement

Catalog Entries

Within any given part of the catalog, the page display of entries will make their arrangement obvious. However, a statement of some of the Library's basic filing practices will facilitate use of the catalog as a whole.

1. General order of entries is:

Author
Periodical title
Periodical title as author
Subject
Title

Single letters, whether abbreviations or initials, file at the beginning of that part of the alphabet.

History cards precede entries of the organization described. "See also" references follow the related entries.

Entries for editions of works are filed with the earliest first.

2. Government entries for departments, bureaus, offices, etc., in the more familiar languages are generally arranged under the jurisdiction by the key word following the preposition. For example:

U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

U. S. Dept. of Agriculture.

U. S. Bureau of the Census.

U. S. Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations.

Those in the less familiar languages are arranged word by word.

Contents and Arrangement

3. Subdivisions of corporate bodies are also generally filed on this key-word principle. There are known inconsistencies in the catalog, though. Notable examples are entries for bodies whose names begin with the following terms and include a prepositional phrase: Service, College, Commission, Committee, Conference, Institute, and School.
4. Subject entries are subarranged by author. Generally, the filing order is as follows:
 - Subject without subdivision
 - Subject with geographic subdivision
 - Subject with subject subdivision and inverted subject headings interfiled, e.g.,
 - Milk. Acidity.
 - Milk. Care and handling.
 - Milk, Certified.

Milk, Citric acid in.

Milk. Composition.

Subject followed by qualifying term in parentheses.

Translations of Articles

The author's name is listed in the form in which it appears on the translation. Entries are interfiled whether or not forenames are spelled out and whether or not a joint author appears in the heading.

Inquiries

Cataloging and classification questions about the entries in the Dictionary Catalog should be addressed to the Chief, Division of Catalog and Records, National Agricultural Library, U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. 20250.
